Faculty Senate Resolution
Dr. Bernice Hausman presented the Faculty Resolution to CSA, explaining the intent of the Faculty Senate to establish a more formal role for faculty in governance. Compared to peer institutions, where they have a primarily faculty-run governance system, Virginia Tech’s faculty has less influence in governance. With this resolution, The Faculty Senate hopes to better oversee curriculum and other policy changes which directly affect faculty. The resolution states that any resolution going through Commission of Faculty Affairs, Commission on Research, Commission on Undergraduate Studies and Policies, and the Commission on Graduate Studies and Policies would then go through a 4 week consultation period with faculty senate. Faculty senate will add an appendix to the resolution stating whether it approves/endorse or does approve/endorse the change, but Faculty Senate has the right to waive this consultation if the Faculty Senate believes no further discussion is needed. Dr. Hausman emphasized the hope for a more formal role in governance, not more power, as well as the idea that this resolution does not create a “veto power” for the Faculty Senate.

During discussion, Ms. Morgan Sykes asked why faculty could not intervene informally, as was the case with the Undergraduate Honor System, without the need for this resolution to change the governance structure. Dr. Hausman explained that some departments and commissions are not as accommodating as was the case with the Honor System.

In terms of who could waive consultation from a resolution, the response was that the Faculty Senate waiver committee would decide and that individual commissions themselves would not get to choose whether or not their resolutions were waived from consultation.

Mr. Mikey Erb explained that the repercussions of approving/disproving a resolution through Faculty Senate could cause these resolutions to look less desirable and could cause issues. Dr. Hausman explained that this is essentially the point of the resolution, hoping that resolutions that do not have faculty approval or backing do stand out.

Mr. Greg Purdy explained that by giving the Faculty Senate more time and power of review over these commissions, an imbalance of power in the shared governance structure is created due to students and staff not having extra time and review. Dr. Hausman responded by saying that students and staff could also request a more formal role in commissions that deal specifically with matters relevant to their constituents.

Ms. Fisher asked why the faculty senate representatives serving on those four commissions aren’t sharing information in the way that students and staff representatives do. Dr. Hausman replied explaining that the faculty represents multiple colleges and their representatives do not always fully represent the university across disciplines.

Mr. Matt Chan pointed out uncertainties by students about the new dynamic and implications this resolution would create and Dr. Hausman continued to emphasize that this is not a quest for power, but would improve academic success at the university and make faculty feel that their voice had an impact. She then went on to emphasize that this seemingly “quick fix” for the structure of governance was recommended by the President and Provost.
After a lengthy discussion back and forth, Ms. Tara Reel concluded that the mixed opinions on this resolution may be resolved through a formation of a task force to further assess the need for change in governance structure before a resolution like this passes.
